What's your price for having sex with a guy so old his alternate address is Forest Lawn?

In a perfect world, that's what the judge should ask Sumner Redstone's ex-mistress-turned-current-adversary, Sydney Holland.

In case you somehow missed it, Holland's the greedy mogul monger who for five years lived with and had some kind of sex or other (don't go there, or you'll go mad), with the 93-year-old sex fiend, but who now wants even MORE than the $150 million big ones (money I mean), that she and his other ex, Manuela Herzer, allegedly pocketed.

Even though they've already got 1% of his net worth, Holland's suing Redstone for half of everything he's still got. She's angry that the decrepit sexaholic threw her out after he found out she was giving everything she's got (except the money) to a younger guy. Of course when you're the 93-year-old, everyone in a sex scandal is the younger guy. Jerry Lewis would be the younger man, for God's sake.

But hey, Holland didn't just have "unconventional sex" with her little Redstone love bunny, she — yes — shared chocolate mousse and Sunday movie nights with him as well. If that's not worth a few billion, well what is? God knows what she'd ask for if they'd shared creme brûlée and Tuesday Scrabble nights.

About that unconventional sex. What the hell does that mean? I'd think that if you're over 90, any sex you manage to have at all is unconventional. And really, what's "unconventional" in this era of Internet nasty, where everything that doesn't involve large farm animals and hot soup is considered conventional sex?

I mean, it's not like a 40-year-old woman enters into a romance with a guy who's personally involved in negotiations with Saint Peter and she assumes it's going to be a life of missionary positions and making out by the fire. Moving the man around alone could kill him.

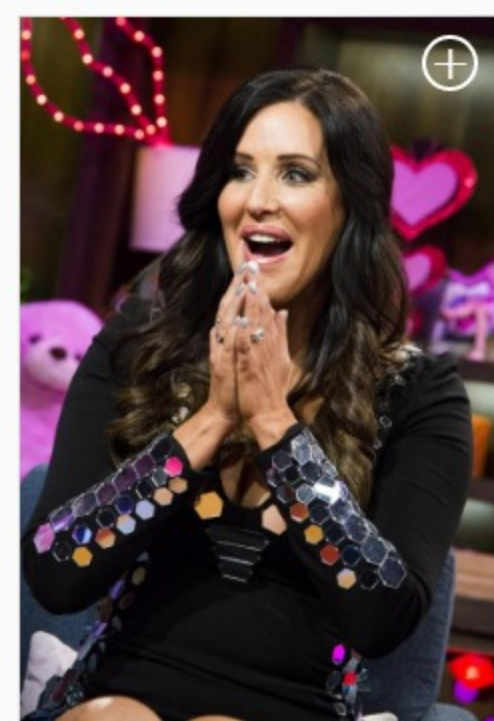

If Sumner asked Sydney, say, to dress up like a bad nurse, it wasn't because he wanted unconventional sex, it was because he could die during sex and wanted to keep a nurse handy.

But worst of all, these two lovebirds got set up by unreality TV show star and "Millionaire Matchmaker" Patti Stanger. If this matchmaker was actually in it for the good of her clients, would she really think "Perfect! This guy's only 50 years older than she is!" Talk about a match made in heaven. Or one where the guy's nearly there already. But apparently, on their first date, she fell hard after seeing his exotic fish. Hey — it can happen.

But seriously, you hear these stories all the time about bazillionaire moguls — arguably among the smartest men on Earth to have made billions on their wits and guts alone — who end up with gorgeous women on their arms who are decades and decades younger. Or in Redstone's case, he had two mistresses on his arms — one on each side, holding him upright.

I mean do these guys honestly think these young, beautiful women love them for themselves and not their enormously big, er, bank balances?

Absolutely not, said my friend-about-town and NY1 TV show partner, Mark Simone, who lunches with moguls as often as most people grab a grande at Starbucks. No matter what we think, Mark says these guys are not in it, God forbid, for love.

"They want sex," he says. "Not romance! Like one guy told me about a hooker, 'It's not $5,000 for her to come over, it's $5,000 for her to leave as soon as you're done.'"

Sydney Holland left not with thousands, but with millions, yet she's still angry that Redstone also managed to hand out millions to other women. Not fair! These other women didn't even have to share the chocolate mousse!

Sumner's moved on. Now all he wants for Christmas is a new mistress, a new mistress, a new mistress ...
